STUDYING THE BRAIN

MODERN SCIENCE KNOWS HOW WE THINK, SEE, HEAR AND FEEL

Locating Brain Diseases by Observing the Action of Parts of the Body-Curious Things Brain Experts Have Discovered

Definite knowledge has recently been acquired regarding the anatomy of the hu-man mind. It is now understood, with a fair degree of accuracy, where and how ideas of various kinds originate in differ-ont parts of the so called gray matter.

The organ of thought has been divided up into sections, as it were, which are severally responsible for the creation of ideas and images of many classes. Certain areas of brain surface are recognized as controling vision hearing tasts, small and so.

of brain surface are recognized as controlling vision, hearing, taste, smell and vocal speech, while others govern the muscular mechanism of the body. If you move your big toe, you direct its motion by orders conveyed from a point of the cerebral cortex directly beneath the very middle of the top of the skull.

At the University of Pennsylvania important work in this line of scientific research is being carried on under the direction of Dr. Lightner Witmer. He has a laboratory fitted up with all sorts of queer looking machinery for finding out how long it takes people to think, to see, to hear, to feel, to distinguish colors and other such things. There are models of brains, which one may take apart and put together again as if they were Chinese puztogether again as if they were Chinese puz

Most of the knowledge thus obtained has been got by studying the brains of low-er animals, chiefly dogs and monkeys. It does not always follow that what is true of does not always follow that what is true of a monkey is true of a man, and scientists have been led into a good many errors by assumptions of that kind. Unfortunately it is not practicable to make experiments upon living human brains, save in exceptional cases where surgical operations have to be performed on them. But it is very easy to remove a portion of the skull of a monkey and to observe how the beasts, acts when stimulation—electricity is usually employed for the purpose—is applied to one employed for the purpose—is applied to one portion or another of the surface. Acquaintance with the so called motor Acquaintance with the so called motor arxis has become so accurate that a disease of a part of the brain can usually be located with exactness by observation of the muscles of the body. An abnormal wiggle of the big toe would lead the physician to look for trouble in the middle of the top of the head. Maybe there would be no cure for it, and then again perhaps something might be done. If it were ascertained that the patient had received a blow there, it might be imagined that a fracture previously unsuspected had occurred, causing pressure on the brain. In that case relief would probably be obtained by trephining.

case relief would probably be obtained by trephining.

An interesting instance on record is that of a girl who was suddenly seized with paralysis of one side of the face, necompanied by loss of power of speech. Within three or four days the paralysis passed downward from the arm to the body and finally to the leg on the same side. It was decided by the doctors that the symptoms indicated a brain hemorrhage up the fissure of Rolando and involving the areas corresponding to the arm ing the areas corresponding to the arm and leg. The girl died, and a post mor-tem examination disclosed the fact that this was exactly what had occurred.

The fissure of Rolando runs across the top of the head from side to side and al-The lissure of Rolando runs across the top of the head from side to side and almost from ear to ear. In and about it are located the most important motor areas which govern the muscular movements of the body. The highest point corresponds to the toe. Following the fissure down the side of the head toward the ear comes the leg, next the arm and finally the face. That portion which represents the face is much more highly differentiated—i. e., split up into a great many smaller areas. Thanks to this arrangement, one is able to vary one's countenance with an almost infinite play of expression, every little muscle being under ready control.

Close by and associated with the area representing the face is that of vocal speech. This latter area is so highly differentiated that each letter and numeral seems to possess its own special tract. There is a case on record of a man who forgot the letters B, P, Q, X and Y and the numerals, 6, 7 and 8. In other respects he was all right. But he could not read because the letters mentioned were unknown to him. Of course he could not visite.

ause the letters mentioned were unknown o him. Of course he could not write ither. He was unable to add 2 and 6 beause 6 was unknown to him. When he ried to write out the word "six," he ould only get as far as the first two let-ers, inasmuch as "x" was forgotten.

People remember things in different vays, according to the habit of the indiidmal For example, you ask one man idual. For example, you ass one man rhen Columbus discovered America, and o will reply 1492 promptly, having a vis-lal picture of the figures forming that late in his mind. But another person will recall the date not in that manner at all. but by sound. In the latter case it may be the centers of hearing that furnish the memory, but it is more likely to be those of vocal speech. The best spellers are visualists. They see mental pictures of words, spelling them by reading them off as if from a blackboard. Lots of folks have no such pictures at all. Most of them seem to depend chiefly, if not wholly more seem to depend chiefly, if not wholly, upor the habit of using the letters and syllables in certain forms of speaking.

The part of the brain belonging to and The part of the brain belonging to and representing each sense—seeing, hearing or what not—seems to be a complete little brain in itself. A banker of Frankfort lost the use of his visual brain for purposes of memory and was obliged to begin like a child and train his auditory brain. The orator, whose words pour out in eloquent flood, as if self inspired, posses centers of vocal speech which are highly developed, constituting in themselves a brain capable of doing its own thinking, as it were.—New York World.

In a Woman's Stomach.

In 1892 a woman died at Albany who had for a number of years been possessed with an uncontrollable desire to swallow all sorts of indigestible substances. A record kept by the physician who performed the autopsy gives the following as a list of the articles found in her stomach: Fif-ty-one hairplus, 16 needles, 3 darning nee-dles, 32 mails of all sizes, 2 screws, 3 pieces of iron rod 3 inches long and one-fourth of an inch thick, 2 rolls of hair, 2 pieces of wood and 3 pieces of cloth, each of the latter being about 5 inches long and an tach wide.—St. Louis Republic.

BUDY GRAPPLERS.

Some of the Difficulties In Recovering Drowned Persons.

Drowned Persons.

Grappling for dead bodies is a difficult and laborious task. In scaport cities where a harbor police force is maintained the work of looking for people supposed to have been drowned is allotted to them. In other places the regular police force generally carries on the work, though it is not infrequent for private parties to grapple on their own account, with the hope of obtaining the standing reward offered by the state for the recovery of drowned bodies. In Massachusetts the amount of the reward is $5, and it is paid to the persons who take the body from the water.

It requires three men to operate one grappler. Two are the oarsmen of the boat and the third is the man who controls the grappling fron. A grappler is a straight bar of iron, upon which is fixed about a dozen iron hooks. The hooks are placed on two sides of the bar, and there is a long iron handle in the center of the bar, to which the roze held by the man in the dozen iron hooks. The hooks are placed on two sides of the bar, and there is a long iron handle in the center of the bar, to which the rope held by the man in the boat is attached. In addition to the big hooks, there are about a dozen codfish hooks, attached all along the iron bar by little pieces of cod line. The grappler is dropped to the bottom and dragged along behind the boat.

The moment the hooks come in contact with anything on the bettern the rope.

The moment the hooks come in contact with anything on the bottom the man with the rope in his hand can tell it in much the same way that a fisherman knows when he gets a "bite." It requires no great strength to haul a body from the bottom to the surface. It is then towed to the shore and landed, and then the medical examiner is sent for to inspect it. It must not be moved before.

Of course it is often more luck than anything in finding a person supposed to be thing in finding a person supposed to be drowned. In still water, such as lakes and ponds, and when the spot where the person sank can be pointed out with a reasonable degree of accuracy, the success of the searchers is an easy matter. But in rivers, and harbors especially, where there is a good deal of tide, not one body in ten can be recovered even when the drowned person was seen to sink and the spot is pointed out.-Boston Journal.

Some seeds take longer than others to germinate—for instance, hellyhocks, mar-igolds, gillyflowers, rose of heaven, zinnias, come up in from three to five days, if all circumstances are favorable—that is, if it is warm, moist and sunny enough. As-ters, single dahlias, sunflowers, cornflowters, single damas, samewers, termowers, erimowers, mignonette, morning glory, coreopsis, picotee pinks, wallflowers, sweet williams and by far the greater number of annuals appear in from five to seven days, balsams, pansies, begonias, poppies, verbenas, drummond's phlox and many others in from eight to ten days, columbines, phlox, artemesia, feverfew, etc., in from 10 to 12 days, forgetmenot, petunia, nicotiana in from 12 to 15 days, others in from 16 to 29 days. MY CLOCK.

In the silence of the night.
If I waken with affright
From a dream that's full of terror and annoy,
There's a sound that fills my heart
With a meledy of art
Full of beauty, full of pleasure, full of joy.

'Tis the steady "tick, tick, tock,"
Of my sturdy little clock,
As it sits across the room upon a shelf,
And it says: "Don't be afraid,
For I've closely by you staid
While you were off in the land of dreams yourself.

"With a steady 'tick, tick, tick,'
I am never tired or sick,
And I count the minutes over as they fly,
I'm the truest friend you've got,
And share your cv'ry lot,
And I'm ready to stand by you till you die."

It's a common sort of clock,
But I like its lusty "tock,"
And it fills my soul with courage by its song.
In the storm or cold or rain
I hear its bright refrain
As it faithfully pursues its path along.

For it tells me to be true To each thing I have to do,

And no matter if the world appland or scorn;
That full soon must pass the night
And the sweet and precious light
Be unfolded with the coming of the morn.

FOOLED HIS LANDLADY.

Young Millingham's Heavy Correspond-ence Paid His Board For a Week. There is more than one way of beguiling

Mrs. Sunday, who keeps a ver excellent establishment in Forty-third street, grew suspicious of young Millingham, one of her boarders. He had for three weeks neg-lected the trifling formality of paying her any money, and she had prepared to speak to him about it Saturday morning.

But he saw the resolution written in her face and escaped. In the afternoon he sent the following advertisement to a morning

He managed to get in at an hour when Mrs. Sunday was out of his way and comfortably abed. At the breakfast table, where he appeared fairly radiant in smiles of assurance, he confided to his neighbor, though for the evident benefit of his landlady, that half a dozen men had called on him the previous aftereon for his new. him the previous afternoon for his new formula.

There was an armful of them in the evening, and Mrs. Sunday was more than gracious to him. Tuesday he told her he had used up all his materials, and borrowed $10 of her to purchase a new supply. Wednesday she told the other boarders she was surprised that none of them had Mr. Millingham's business ability.

Lucullus' famous banquets were a mere bagatelle to the dinners given by Vitellius. This glutton of proverbial memory spent nearly $16,000 a day, or its equivalent in denarl, upon his eating, and it was not uncommon for him to give a little feast that cost $60,000. At one of these there was served a golden bowlful of peacocks' brains. Another dish was made of tongues of the flamingo, a very rare morsel. To procure these dainties it was necessary to send several ships to the strait of Gibraland several ships to the strait of Gibraltar and companies of hunters to the moun-tains of Krapacks.—New York Press.

The Charm In Scotch.

I wonder if persons who can write Scotch I wonder if persons who can write Scotch are sufficiently aware of the great literary advantage they have over writers who are not born to that ability. It is no credit to them that they can do it. It is a gift to nature dropped in their lap. I never heard of any one who learned by artificial means to write Scotch. Scotch writers do it, and no one else. It has long been obvious that the proportion of good writers to the whole Scotch population was exceedingly large, but I do not remember that it has ever been pointed out how much easier it is for a Scotchman to be a good writer that ana Scotchman to be a good writer than an other because of his innate command of the Scotch tongue.
